This astounding story involves ships, December 5th, the Menai Strait in Wales and a lucky name.

On December 5, 1664, the tremendous waters in the Menai Strait sank a ship, claiming the lives of 81 passengers except one. The survivor's name was Hugh Williams. The same horrendous accident happened to another ship on December 5, 1785. It was survived by only one passenger named Hugh Williams. 35 years later, on December 5, 1820, another ship succumbed to the waters in the Menai Strait. Everyone aboard drowned in the catastrophic incident except one- a passenger name Hugh Williams.

It's an earth-shattering coincidence, isn't it? If one notes that Hugh and Williams are popular Welsh names plus the fact that the coast of Wales is surrounded by turbulent waters, the story would sound more plausible than bizarre.

My company has booked a cruise for three days. I'm sure it will be nice because the ship is big- it has a pool, a golf course and a big lounge. We will be served with unlimited food and drinks while aboard. My problem is, I am seasick but I really need to join this cruise. What should I do?
