

Respect for the Aged Day

One of the many holidays annually observed in Japan is Respect for the Aged Day. This custom was proclaimed as a national holiday in 1966. Presently, it is celebrated every third Monday of September. Communities often celebrate this event by organizing activities for the elderly and giving them special gifts. This holiday aims to acknowledge the older generation for their significant contributions to the society and celebrate longevity.

You should begin with this sentence: One day, Yuki and Ken decided to do something special for their grandparents.
