Reddit moves to revamp site in effort to deal with offensive posts

After years of controversy over the vulgar and hate-filled posts that populate Reddit, the online message board now may split the baby. In an attempt to appease the offended and the offenders, the San Francisco company has proposed striking a delicate balance: prioritizing the site's constructive content, banning some topics and cordoning off many problematic posts to their own, hard-to-access area. Whether such a strategy would placate both sides or alienate everyone is the big unknown. Reddit has yet to make any concrete changes and asked users to weigh in.

Hello? I have a concern. I'm staying at Room 203 and the people in the room next to mine are very noisy and they have loud music on. It's been like this since 8PM and it's already 4AM. I have an important business presentation later and I could barely focus on my talking points. I couldn't sleep either. I'm calling to see if you could do something about it. I just need 2 hours of silence and I'll be fine. Please help me out.
